Parties driving away from Meddybemos of 1582 miles, the last race being from Monday morning saw a large fire over on the Scott Arm, so called. It was supposed to be the Calatis Club house on fire. The Calatis party who had been stopping there left the night before for home. On arrival of the Eastport parties word was sent to Calatis of the fire and parties interested in the house drove out to investigate, and found that that house with all its furnishings had been burned. The camp had only redently been completed, and was an attractive little house with a plazza all around it and pa nted red. Its location was one of the firest around the fake.

New Books. POINS DE DAVID BARKER. There has just been sened, from the press of O. F. knowles & Co , of this city, a new ecition of the poems of the late David Barker Esq. with a biographical sketch by the late Judge John E. Godf ey. Of the merit of Mr. Burker's poem t is unnecessary to speak; they have lorg been, most of them as familiar as housefold words, and the estcean in which they are held is shown in the f. c. that since the earlier edition was exhausted there has been a constant derand for them from near and far, and b is answer to these demands that the present edition is issued. The style of the present volume is in every way worthy of its co item's and reflects the highest cree on Messrs. Knowles & Co. Its typogruphy excellent, and is in red line sty-elegant binding. It contains a portrait of Barker and a number of iliustrations noluding the poet's birth-place and flis ater hone. The look is sold only by subscription and the sale, since the book was announced, his been very large. Price with gilt edges $2.00; with colored

Sundstrom's Great Swim.

FROM HAMILTON FERRY TO HIGH BRIDGE

IN FOUR HOURS AND FIVE MINUTES.

When the Hamilton ferry-boat Atlantic left Brooklyman her 2 o'clock trip, says the New York World, a brown-faced young philosopher with a sandy mustache and a blue-checked gingham jumper, such and labor-checked want to the late of the late of the bronzed young man seemed to find a great attraction in it. He kept puffing industriously at a big cigar, though, and nobody would for a moment think that he wanted to jump overboard and spoil his smoke. But when the Atlantic was within a hundred yards of the New York shore he waved his right arm over his head and dived off the stern of the loot, to the great astonishment of the pilot and the utter ruin of his fen-cent cigar. Just then akrow-bont full of young men happened alongs They waved a long red flag to the pilot from a stout staff, which meant, "Don't stop to pick him up," and the Alantic steamed away. One minute and a quarter later the philospher's bare brown head popped out of the flood, and his naked left arm flashed through the air as he started northward at a great rate. While he was downstairs in the East River help had peeled off all his 'longshoreman's clethes, and he came up smiling, with nothing on but a strong coat of porpoise oil and a list determination to swim to High Bridge. The people who gazed at him from the ferry boat didn't know his name, but the men in the boat knew he was Gus Sundstrom, the Nigw York Athletic Club's 186 pound swimming teacher. A long headed member of the club with sporting blood and plenty of money had bet $100 that he could not swim from Hamilton Ferry to High Bridge in four hours. There is a popular impression that the distance is sixteen miles, but the club's faith in Gus is so great that the bet was quickly covered. Pilot Michael Gaynor proudly held up the red flag so that the swimmer could easily find his way up the r ver behind it, and Capt. Jerc Connor, bent the oars double in his efforts to keep well in the lead. Beautiful Judge Monroe, with red cheeks and a flowing tawny mustache sat in the stern-sheets of his boat and bossed things generally. He looked more like a poet than a sportingman, but the swimmer had faith in him and so had all the other knowing people.
